The Australian Geographer focuses primarily on two areas of research: Australia and its region, including developments, issues and policies in Australia, the western Pacific, the Indian Ocean, Asia and Antarctica; and environmental studies, particularly the biophysical environment and human interaction with it. Papers dealing with international issues, or with nations other than Australia and those within its region, must have an Australian, Asian or Pacific perspective or deal with implications for Australia or its neighbours. Papers addressing theoretical and philosophical issues in geography are also sought. Preference will be given to papers which have a broad appeal to geographers, geography educators and people in cognate areas including Australian studies and environmental studies. More specialised papers must include material that places the study in a broader context and must be written in a way that makes them accessible to non-specialist geographers. Consideration will also be given to shorter papers and notes on topical issues of geographical interest that fall within the areas listed above.

Refereeing: all suitable manuscripts submitted to the Australian Geographer are sent to two referees in a full 'double blind' refereeing process.
